It's a pleasure to be able to offer classes again and to have the opportunity to help encourage and guide those keen to develop their pencil drawing. The title is broad, as I want to open it up for as many as possible and not feel constrained to a certain subject matter. It allows participants to bring some of their own ideas to the table and have an input into what we cover in the term. That said, there are certain fundamentals of drawing that we will aim to cover, including pencil techniques, values and shading, perspective and proportions, to create a solid foundation and build confidence in using pencil for different drawings.

We'll consider the complexities of the mind and the notion of free will, contemplating our autonomy and responsibility. Additionally, we'll explore how philosophy informs scientific inquiry and the evolution of aesthetics from antiquity to meta-modernism.
